

THEY WANT PROTECTION

The Australian View of Great Britain's Free Trade Policy.

HARD ON THE COLONIES.

An Intelligent and Vigorous Protest Against Cutting the Life Out of the New Communities for the Benefit of the Mother Country—They Want a Chance to Have Reciprocal Trade With the World—Great Britain Standing Alone.

The Adelaide, South Australia, Advertiser, Dec. 23, 1891.

The burning question of the renewal of commercial treaties and reciprocity continues to engross public attention in Europe. Every day the telegraph brings us news of further combinations between different countries, under which they are to receive each other's goods on mutually advantageous terms. It is needless to say that England, clinging as she does to absolute free trade, has been left altogether out in the cold. She is in no position to avail herself of the commercial prizes which are being distributed with no niggardly hand; and, unfortunately for the colonies, they are also deprived of any share in the trade markets which will be opened. As we recently pointed out, Canada has petitioned the queen against the renewal of the commercial treaties between the German Zollverein and Belgium on the one side and Great Britain on the other. These treaties expire in February, and contain the well-known most-favored-nation clause, which prohibits the colonies, as well as England, from making any discrimination in favor of other countries, no matter what commercial advantages they may offer in return. Lord Salisbury, however, seems to be alive to the necessity of allowing some latitude to the colonies in negotiating their trade relations with foreign countries, and it should be the untiring endeavor of the Agents-General in London to impress upon the Prime Minister that colonial interests must not be sacrificed to Imperial free trade in the future. There seems to be no reason why the mother country in negotiating the new treaties should not make different arrangements for herself and her colonies. These treaties can be made large enough to contain such clauses; and if not would it not be only fair to allow colonies believing in the benefits of protection to regulate their own commercial as well as their own fiscal arrangements? Lord Salisbury recently stated that the warfare of nations is fast shifting its battlefield. It is industrial not material warfare which will occupy the chancelleries and diplomacies of the future. This warfare, according to the British Premier, has for its prize the markets of the world and for its weapon protection. Yet England flings away what is admitted to be the only efficacious weapon, and forces her disbelieving colonies to accept that they consider her heretical creed. The Prime Minister went on to say that England occupied the position of Athenians contra mundum; in plain English she alone is right in her free-trade policy, and all the rest of the world is wrong. "But," he continued, "I have no doubt that the commercial community of this country does not falter in its attachment to free-trade, and I do not ascribe to it any special virtue in that respect, because the fact that the article with respect to which we should have to exercise protection, if exercised at all, are mainly articles of first consumption bearing upon the necessities of the whole body of our population is, in my belief, an absolute guarantee that we shall never return to the ways of protection." Exactly so. But England did not adopt free trade until her manufactures were in a flourishing condition, and she was no longer able to supply her own people with food. The colonies, on the other hand, have not as yet arrived at this stage of development, and are looking for markets for their produce in Great Britain and elsewhere. We cannot trade off our wines against French silks, or our wool against American kerosene, because years ago England had reached a stage at which she was unable to feed her hungry millions without importing largely of the necessities of life. Practically it does not matter a whit to us whether we find a market for our produce in England or on the continent, but it most assuredly does matter to us that we should find a market somewhere.

The natural inclination of the colonies is to sell to and buy from the mother country. This inclination is based not merely upon sentimental but upon material reasons; such, for instance, as similarity of habits, similarity of language, and similarity of laws. The colonies will always prefer to deal with England, but unfortunately England does not seem to show any desire to return the compliment. Here is another dictum of Lord Salisbury when addressing the Trade League:—"If you give preferential treatment to your colonies, it must be that you tax their similar goods to the rest of the world, and that the colonies are to command a better price for their goods than they would obtain under unrestricted competition. A better price for the vendor means a more disagreeable price for the consumer, and we have yet to receive proof that the people of this country are in favor of a policy of preferential taxes on wheat, corn, and on wool." So said his lordship, but he had not long to wait for a contradiction, for the National Union of Conservative Associations at Birmingham, which has recently been in session and at which the prime minister was present and made a speech, passed a resolution urging the government to promote mutually-favoring customs tariffs between Great Britain and the colonies. This resolution must have somewhat startled the premier, and he is next found saying that the government were anxious to discover a remedy for the evil effects of the foreign tariffs on the British workman and British trade if they could do so without wandering into the regions of economic error. By this he probably meant reciprocity or restricted protection. Since the last delivery of the British premier trade has become worse, and the English board of trade returns for November show a continued falling off, the decrease in the exports during the month being equal to 10½ per cent in comparison with those of last year, and this in the teeth of the fact that the imports increased 18 per cent during the same period. We have before pointed out that the last act of the Canadian Parliament was to petition the queen against a renewal of the Belgian and German commercial treaties, and if our representatives in London exert themselves energetically there can be little doubt that something will be done. But time must not be lost, as the opportunity will not occur again for many a long year. That England is willing to act fairly in the matter is shown by what is taking place in the West Indian colonies. These colonies are large producers of sugar and importers of dry goods and breadstuffs. They have always done a large trade with the United States, but under the new McKinley tariff they found that their market for sugar in America was in considerable danger. The reciprocity clause of the McKinley tariff act gives the President the power of admitting tea, coffee, sugar and hides free of duty or at a largely reduced rate from countries which offer similar advantages to the goods of the United States. The latter country concluded a treaty with Spain under which the sugar of Cuba is admitted free, and of course Barbadoes, Jamaica, and the other English islands found themselves at an enormous disadvantage. They did not, however, sit down idly and lament their misfortunes or squabble over no-confidence motions, but manfully began to fight against the act-back they had received. Their energy has been rewarded, and through the instrumentality of the British foreign office a reciprocity arrangement has been concluded between the states and the West Indian islands, and the sugar of these colonies will now be received on equal terms with that of Cuba. What the islands have promised to admit free in return we do not as yet know, but nations having a commercial treaty containing a most-favored-nation clause with Great Britain can probably insist upon having their goods admitted on equally advantageous terms as those of the United States if it should be worth their while to do so. The question whether the colonies have the right to discriminate in this way or not has never been tested, but there can be scarcely any doubt that England would be obliged to enforce her obligations if called upon to do so. Any such reciprocal arrangement between adjacent colonies or colonies constituting a group, as for instance, South Australia and New South Wales, or South Australia and Tasmania, could not perhaps be interfered with even if federation does not take place, but it is certainly more than doubtful whether a reciprocity arrangement between distant colonies, such for instance as South Australia and Canada, would not be affected by the nation-favored clause. Suppose that an arrangement were made to-morrow between Queensland and Canada whereby the latter country agreed to admit: Queensland sugar free in consideration of a free market for wheat and lumber would Germany have a right to demand that her beetroot sugar should also be admitted free? The commercial treaty enacts that "in the colonies and foreign possessions the produce of the Zollverein shall not be subject to any higher or other import duties than the produce of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or any other country, of like kind." In this case the question would arise whether it is consistent with the treaty to distinguish in favor of cane sugar against beet sugar.

Parliament has gone about its business without even discussing this most important topic. If anything is to be done it must be done quickly, for the treaties expire in February. The British government confess that they are fully alive to the ruinous effect that the renewal of these treaties in their present form may have upon the commerce of the colonies, and they have also shown themselves willing, as is proved by the case of the West Indies, to listen to the just complaints of their fellow-subjects not domiciled in free trade England. It will be our own fault if we allow the opportunity to slip by. The objections to the treaties from a colonial point of view are numerous and cogent. The colonies are regarded as countries foreign to Great Britain, a view of the relation which is taken in no other matter, as for instance in the postal regulations. Such a view of the relationship between the colonies and the mother country is not taken by any other country in regard to its colonies, and if it is carried out to its logical conclusion must tend to the disintegration of the empire. Again, while the colonies have the right to regulate their own fiscal arrangements, foreign countries only recognize Great Britain and look to her to enforce her treaty obligations, thus causing unnecessary friction between England and the colonies, as is unfortunately at present the case in Newfoundland. It is sincerely to be hoped that we are not to be hampered in the future by the entangling commercial alliances of free trade England in getting a little slice of the good things that are at present being distributed in Europe and America. Nor should it be forgotten that the success of reciprocity in the states will probably add other articles to the items of tea, coffee, sugar and hides already included under the McKinley act, and that a most probable addition would be wool.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury.

Mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

"John Anderson, my Joe,"

In the Scotch ballad, was about to totter down the declivity of life with his aged wife. How it would have smoothed the rough places for the respected John and his venerable spouse could they have seen their growing infirmities with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, that benign help to the aged, the weak and those recovering from slow, from exhausting diseases. When the lamp of life is on the wane, man specially requires a wholesome medicinal aid, a sustaining tonic, a wholesome corrective. The aged and the feeble are particularly susceptible to influences which produce disease, and Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, interrupted by a relapse. This standard American invigorant is eminently adapted to the needs of such persons, and it always fills the bill. In dyspepsia, constipation, rheumatism, kidney troubles and in grippe are among the troubles that it overcomes.

HAVE YOU THE GRIPPE?

Many People Have It and Do Not Know It. How to Recognize the Symptoms and How to Treat Them.

Hundreds of people have the Grippe who do not know it. Not necessarily the final stages, but the first stages. They feel pains in the head, and a bad taste in the mouth, get tired and despondent, have chilly sensations, limbs and muscles ache. In some cases these things are overlooked. In most cases perhaps they are considered simply a slight cold. In nearly every case they indicate the coming of Grippe. There is but one thing to do when these symptoms appear, and that is to take prompt and vigorous measures to fortify nature to repel the enemy. A little well directed effort at just the right time will accomplish very much more than laborious efforts afterwards. There is but one thing to be done, and that is to use a pure stimulant, something that will promptly arrest, and in no way injure, something endorsed by scientists, recommended by physicians, and popular because so efficient—Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey. Two years ago, and last year when the Grippe was raging, this was the standard remedy used, and recommended by the profession. It did more to prevent the Grippe than all other known or recommended remedies. It preserved many people in health who would otherwise have been grievously sick, perhaps even worse. It is as efficient to-day as ever. It should be borne in mind that other so-called whiskeys may not be so efficient, and if any dealer asserts that such whiskeys are the same, distrust him at once. There is but one medicinal whiskey, and that is Duffy's Pure Malt.

A Sensible Summing Up—The "Electioneering" Dodge Considered—The Nation's Honor.

New York Times.

As to our own Government, it is quite sufficient answer, both to its domestic and to its foreign critics, that it has accurately represented the feeling of the American people, and that the publication of the documents which accompanied the President's special message showed the necessity of this message. The domestic critics who inquire what real harm it does a man to spit in his face, or what good it does a nation to have its flag saluted when its flag has been insulted, or why you should not continue a friendly negotiation with a man who calls you a liar, represent nobody, not even themselves. The English critics who describe the demands of the United States as a piece of "electioneering," probably reflect the sentiments of their readers, such as Mr. Matta reflected the sentiments of the ignorant and irreflexive part of the Chilean people. The contented ignorance of these comments will have the good effect of still further increasing the American indifference to English opinion which has been steadily increasing for many years.

"Laura," said George, with an eager, restless yearning in his gaze, "may I ask a favor of you, dear?"

They had sat in the darkened parlor for hours, in the eloquent communion of soul with soul that needs no articulate sound to give it language.

But something impelled George to speak. The longing that surged up from his very heart must find expression in words. Therefore he has spoken.

"What is it, George?" she whispered.

"It may involve some sacrifice, darling. But believe me, Laura, it is for the best!"

"What is it, George?" she repeated in a voice that trembled with a vague foreboding of coming disaster.

"You will believe me, dearest," he said, with an agitation becoming every moment more uncontrollable, "when I say that I am driven to ask it by circumstances over which I have no control, that I have pondered long over it, and am not acting from hasty impulse."

"Yes! yes! the beautiful young girl exclaimed with quivering lip. "What is it you ask, George? What is it?"

"Darling," he said, and the wild imploring look on his face thrilled her to the inmost depths of her being. "I wish you would sit on the other knee awhile. This one is getting horribly tired!"

How to Succeed.

This is the great problem of life which few satisfactorily solve. Some fail because of poor health, others want of luck, but the majority from deficient grit—want of nerve. They are nervous, irresolute, changeable, easily get the blues and "take the spirits down to keep the spirits up," thus wasting money, time, opportunity and nerve force. There is nothing like the Restorative Nerve, discovered by the great specialist, Dr. Miles, to cure all nervous diseases, as headache, the blues, nervous prostration, sleeplessness, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, fits and hysteria.
